ANNOUNCEMENTS:

A Liturgical Lesson: Altar Frontal

“The true liturgical decoration of the altar and its oldest adornment is the frontal (antependium). ... The frontal – the altar’s clothing – has a deep, symbolical value. As the early linen clothing of the altar recalled our Lord’s burial shroud, so the precious colored fabric of the later frontal is to recall his royalty. At the ordination of a sub-deacon, the bishop in his charge to the candidate says, ‘the cloths and corporals of the altar [which represents Christ] are the members of Christ, God’s faithful people, with whom, as with costly garments, the Lord is clad, according to the Psalmist: “The Lord reigns as king, robed in majesty.”’ The clothed altar with its beauty and changing colors is a symbol of the Mystical Body – the whole Christ, Christ united with all his saints – it translates this doctrine into the language of color and form. In addition to its symbolical value, the frontal – with its sequence of colors and its changing form and decoration – lends variety and new beauty to the altar, and helps to mark the degrees of festivity in the Church’s liturgy. ... it also draws attention to the altar, as the focal point of the church, giving it architectural prominence.”
